

across a broad range of

The House Republican majority, the theory goes, will oppose whatever the president recommends — even warmed-over, halfway measures — so why not use the pulpit and megaphone unique to the president's office to drive them into a defensive posture and force them to defend protecting millionaires while thwarting expanding job opportunities for the hurting middle class?

He should eschew negotiations, his supporters suggest, and avoi