

By

Taxes on income and consumption of goods and services are traditionally seen as more reliable indicators of individual wealth, yet in meeting the cost of all local governments, neither one is used.

On those infrequent occasions when the issue is raised, there is little appetite displayed to confront it on a

